NEW LEADERSHIP IS IMPERATIVE

This prolonged business recession, now dubbed “The Great Recession,” which began in October 2008, has served America as a moral physic that is cleansing it of a multitude of evils and paving the way for a new group of leaders and a new brand of leadership.

The type of leadership America boasted before the recession failed the people during their most significant emergency. In practically all venues of society (academic, industrial, government, and social/cultural), groups have witnessed failed endeavors.

This crisis has brought into the limelight a real need for authentic leaders, men, and women, of genuine leadership qualities. This astounding fact calls for a statement of the qualities which constitute leadership.

In this guide, I have outlined 20 qualities for those who aspire to be leaders in the future.
